'Trans'

Think of our value of belonging, how would we make someone who is transgender know and feel that they belong at Cradley?

Understanding, acceptance and respect for others are really important values that we can all try to live our lives by.

We should all show others the kindness we would like to be shown.

Celebrating Our Identities

Whether we identify as a girl, boy, neither or both, gender is just one small part of our identities.

Our identities make us who we are. Identity can include:

- culture and religion;
- interests and hobbies;
- groups that we belong to;
- skills we have or jobs we do;
- teams we support;
- clothes we wear;
- music, films and games we like.

Being an Ally

The word ally basically means friend.

An ally can support others and speak up if something is said or done that is unfair or unkind.

We can all be trans allies and be supportive of transgender people. Let's make sure trans people are included and are treated with acceptance and respect — not just during Transgender Awareness Week but at all times.

Curiosity

It's natural to feel curious and want to know more about people who are different to us.

What's important is that the questions we ask are polite and respectful.

It's also important to make sure that the information we get when we ask questions is accurate. That's why it's important to ask a trusted adult if you have any questions
